Martin serves on the NACTEC Advisory Board as a representative of Golovin. An experienced heavy equipment operator, he is all too familiar with the demand for skilled labor in his field. As a board member, Martin identified the need for heavy equipment training and suggested NACTEC expand its construction training program. Thanks to his input, NACTEC now has an industry-based Heavy Equipment Simulator Center used by all students attending training programs. Making his voice heard, Martin is bringing about change for students in Northwestern Alaska. The current generation of students will be better prepared for High Demand, High Pay construction jobs across rural Alaska thanks to his leadership.
